THE RAD BOY.

flow His Pa Received the National Temperance Delegates.

Week's day.

"I have had the hardest work I ever experienced, jerking soda for the Young Men's Christian Association," said the boy as he pecled a banana.

"What do you mean, boy?" said the grocery man. "Don't cast any reflections on such a noble association. They don't drink, do they?"

"Drink? Oh, no! They don't drink anything intoxicating, but when it comes to soda they flood themselves You know there has been a National convention of delegates from all the Young Men's Christian Associations of the whole country-about three hundred-here, and our store is right on the street where they passed four times a day, and I never saw such appetites for soda. There has been one continual fizz in our store since Wednesday. Of course, if a man winks when I ask him what flavor he wants, and says 'never mind,' I know enough to put in brandy. But I wouldn't smuggle it into a man for nothing. This Christian Association convention has caused a coldness between pa and ma, though."

"How's that? Your pa isn't jealous, is he ?" and the govery man came around from behind the counter to get the latest gossip to retail to 'the hired girls who traded with him. "Jealous nothin'," said the boy as he took a few raisins out of a box. "You see, the delegates were shuffled off to all the church members to take care of, and they dealt two to ma, and she never told pa anything about it. They came to supper the first night, and pa didn't get home, so they went to the convention in the evening, and ma gave them a night-key, and pa came home from the boxing match about eleven o'clock, and ma was asleep. Just as pa got most of his clothes off he heard somebody fumbling at the front door, and he thought it was burglars. Pa has got nerve enough when he is on the inside of the house and the burglars are on the outside. He opened the window and looked out, and saw two suspicious looking characters trying to pick the lock with a skeleton-key, and he picked up a right down between the two delegates. Gosh, if it had hit one of them there would have been the solemnest funeral von ever saw. Just as it struck they got the door opened and came into the hall, and the wind was blowing pretty hard, and they thought a cyclone had taken the cupola off the house. They were talking about being miraculously saved, and trying to strike a match on their wet pants, when pa went over to the head of the stairs and pushed over the wire stand filled with potted plants, which struck pretty near the delegates, and one of them said the house was coming down sure, and they'd better go into the cellar, and they went down and got behind the furnace. Pa called me up and wanted me to go down the cellar and tell the burglars we were onto them, and movement of the outer ear in this and for them to come out, but I wasn't very well, so pa locked his door and went to bed. I guess it must have been half an hour before pa's cold feet woke ma up, and then pa told ma not to move for her life, 'cause there were two of the savagest looking burglars that ever was rummaging over the house. Ma smelled pa's breath to see if he had got to drinking again, and then she got up and hid her oroide watch in her shoes, and her Oonalaska ear-rings in the bible, where she said no burglar would ever find them. and pa and ma laid awake till daylight, and pa said he wasn't afraid, and pa and ma went down cellar. Pa stood on the bottom stair and looked around, and one of the delegates said, 'Mister, is the storm over, and is your family safe?' and ma recognized the voice and said, 'Why, delegate said it was no matter, as they had enjoyed themselves real well in the cellar. Ma was mortified almost to death, but the delegates told her it was all right. She was mad at pa at first, but when she saw the broken water pitcher on the front steps, and the potted plants in the hall, she wanted to kill pa, and I guess she would only for the society of the delegates. She couldn't help telling pa he was a bald-headed old fool, but pa didn't retaliate. He is too much of a gentleman to talk back in company. All he said was that a woman old enough to have delegates sawed off on her ought to have sense enough to tell her husband, plained it, and pa apologized, and the

and then they all drifted off into conversation about the convention and the boxing match, and everything was all right on the surface, but after breakfast, when the delegates went to the convention, I noticed pa went right down town and bought a new water pitcher and some more plants. Pa and ma didn't speak all the forenoon, and I guess they wouldn't up to this time, only ma's bonnet came home from the milliner's, and she had to have money to pay for it.

That humanity possesses within the compass of its frame a considerable number of examples of useless parts, which, as G. H. Lewis remarked, have a reference "to a former state of things," is readily proved. If, for instance, we make a superficial examination of the muscular surroundings of the human ear we may discover certain plain exampleof the rudimentary organs, to which the modern anatomist attaches a high im portance as clews and guides to the past history of the race that gives them. The power to move our ears, is, of course, non-existent in the vast majority of mankind. Now and then we meet with an individual who can fulfill one of Lord Dundreary's tests of superiority in that he "can wag his left ear," and can move his right ear also. At will, such individuals can produce feeble but distinct movements of the ear. This power de pends upon an unusual development of muscles which, in ordinary individuals, exist in a rudimentary state. The ability to move the ear is held to be a relic of a power once well developed in the ancestry from which the human race has sprung. Darwin tells us that he saw one man who could draw the whole ear forward; other men," he continues, "can draw it upward," another "could draw it backward; and," adds Mr. Darwin, "from what one of these persons told me, it is probable that most of us, by often new water pitcher that ma had bought touching our ears, and thus directing our the last time we moved, and dropped it attention towards them, could recover some power of movement by repeated trials." Three little muscles, named in anatomy the "attolens," "attrahens" and "retrahens aurem," respectively (or the raiser, forward-drawer and backdrawer of the ear), are found associated with the outer ear in man. They are so small as to be useless for any purpose of ear movement, as we have seen; but that their former and ancestral function was that of moving the ears admits of no question. In lower animals we find corresponding muscles well developed; while we may also discover additional muscle to be represented in the belongings of the ears of many quadrupeds. In the ear of the horse there are such additional muscles; and we can readily conceive that the wonderful pliability and range of other animals would demand an increased muscular supply over that found in higher quadruped life, where ear movement becomes of less importance than in lower existence. Thus we discover that in such apes as the chimpanzee and orang, whose cars closely resemble those of man in form, the ear muscles are well nigh as feebly developed as is the human subject, and the ears of these animals do not appear to be capable of any greater range

Los Angeles winemakers believe that the prices in that section this season will rule at about $20, owing to the abundance of the crop. Sonoma men think that the grapes will command from $19 to $25 per ton, although no contracts it's one of the delegates!
